real freedom, freedom from political tyranny. I don't think I want to see it again after what has happened. All that lovely spontaneity has been spoiled and is now lost; for every politician who appears down there, an artist will be broken. And that wonderful need for freedom – those days are over now; I have to admit, the only thing I love about freedom is the struggle to achieve it; possession of it is of no interest to me.

This project was first started as research into the correlation, if any, between schizophrenia and YouTube. I argued that the platform amplified paranoid thoughts, as like-minded individuals are easy to find. I could also argue that the format of sharing video blogs can increase thought disorders by validating these symptoms - as if to say "look, see - there it is!"

My secondary thought was that a lot of the videos I was finding were very good - for reasons beyond a fetishization of mental illness. Through searching these very-low view count, I saw vistas and DIY weapons and makeup tutorials among the many unexpected things you'd find when you're not looking for anything in particular.

I was simultaneously finding myself slowly 'going crazy' from trying to not quit smoking. I self-diagnosed myself with every breathing problem and anxiety disorder possible, slowly broadening my symptoms. By endlessly researching my 'problem,' I was making my problem worse.

I went back to work and the project sat still. I slowly felt better myself, partially due to the lack of time to ruminate on my own woes. In my particular case, I can determine that the internet amplified my terror and concern due to the fact that I could find what I was looking for - and I wanted to hear bad news to verify my fears.

This compilation of screenshots is the companion piece to the short film 'Untitled David Lynch Project.' I don't remember why I decided it should be called that.

ABOUT MICHAEL

I am a 30yo guy that lives with his dad. Can't find a job. Doesn't have a drivers license. Haven't had a girlfriend since 2008. No steady friends that I hang out with. I spend most of my days trying find something to do to make it go by faster. And that usually is playing ps4. I'm a wasted space in a over crowded world. I am the quintessential loser. I am the protoloser. I am me. And that's fine..... I guess.

Because, in the darkness, the brain cannot get enough information to see the bush clearly, it is teased into exaggerating the significance of what it sees, building it up in imagination as a threatening monster. This is the phenomenon we may call a 'nyktomorph', a 'night shape': an image which, because the brain cannot resolve it, becomes invested with far greater power than if it could be clearly seen and understood. And to understand how fantasy works, one must appreciate that it is precisely because it feeds on these nyktomorphic images which cannot reach resolution that it comes to exercise such an obsessive hold over the human mind.

Shortness of Breath, Yawning, and Sighing Can be Surprising Symptoms of Anxiety & Stress

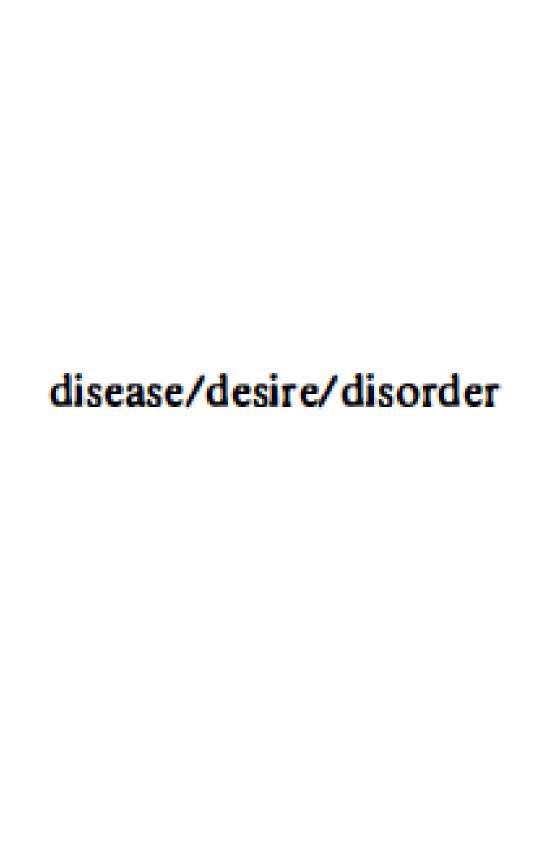

Junkie thinking is part of nicotine withdrawal.

Or, to put it more accurately, junkie thinking is part of nicotine addiction. Once you stop smoking, you can expect that your mind will twist itself into knots trying to convince you to smoke. ^[2] Put yourself on ignore and don't light up. Junkie thinking will subside with time.

Your Current Anxiety Level:

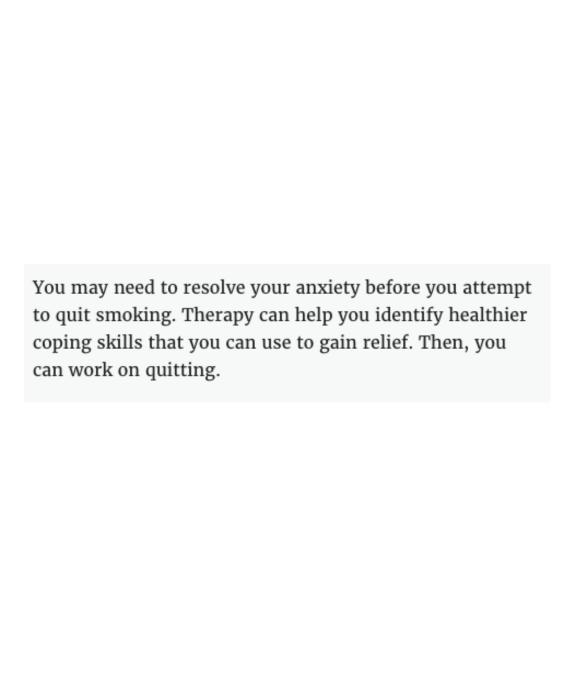

It's hard for you to enjoy life on any consistent level. You're hardly ever experiencing a peace of mind. You're often fearful, worrisome, and unhappy. You don't like being this way but you don't know what to do to change. Things are too much work and no one understands the way you feel. You wear yourself out with your thoughts and "What-if" thinking. You can be happy and confident again. You just need a clear plan of action and the right tools.

UNTITLED DAVID LYNCH PROJECT

Jung or Arieti (maybe) suggested schizophrenia could be a result of an over-stressed brain releasing toxins that damaged the central nervous system. Perhaps i'm paraphrasing. Perhaps i'm wrong.

There are those who will maintain that the schizo is incapable of uttering the word I, and that we must restore his ability to pronounce this hallowed word. All of which the schizo sums up by saying: they're fucking me over again. "I won't say I any more, I'll never utter the word again; it's just too damn stupid. Every time I hear it, I'll use the third person instead, if I happen to remember to. If it amuses them. And it won't make one bit of difference."

Desire intrinsically produces an imaginary object that functions as a double of reality, as though there were a "dreamed-of object behind every real object."

All problems can only be referenced against an 'other'- in order to have, one must do without.

When I write about schizophrenia, I am more accurately detailing a crème brûlée scented vape cloud. I am writing about the snow and the fog in Silent Hill.

I am writing about the way we transmit disease particles through the air over time.

I find myself stumbling over words.

I'm am perhaps talking more about 'schizo-culture,' which was meant as more of an introduction to more radical and avant-garde ways of thinking.

Much like the body without organs, I approach schizophrenia like a horizon instead of a goal.

I'm giving myself a headache trying to figure out what point i'm trying to get to.

I have 322 open tabs in the internet browser on my iPhone.

Frederic Jameson said something about 'postmodernism' into 'late-capitalism' being tied to 'pastiche and schizophrenia.'

I maybe am trying to use schizophrenic to describe a style of work that I like.

When Lacan said "the word is the murder of the thing," was he writing about schizophrenia?

What about when Barthes said that "the sentence, the word, is a way of murdering the outside world"?

It's all about context, really.

Jameson also said that "the allusive and elusive plagiarism of older plots is, of course, also a feature of pastiche."

Perhaps schizophrenia, by my terms, is a realization of plagiarism?
